MUST ENGLAND LOSE INDIA?

Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath

For many months past the eyes of the entire civilized world have been directed eastward once again — not to Palestine this time, however, but to the far away land of India. Beginning with the Round Table Conference of last Fall, and ending in the truce between Lord Irwin and Mahatma Gandhi, events of world wide importance have transpired. Rather reluctantly Britain has made several important concessions to the Indians. The natives may make salt from the waters of the sea; confiscated properties are to be restored; political prisoners are to be set free; a new constitution is promised. On the other hand, the Revolution has been suspended. What of the future? Must England lose India?

Yes, if she follows her autocratic, omniscient and sublimely supercillious and superior Churchills, if she changes not from her stubborn policy of the past, then a war to the death, a war of inconceivable magnitude and horror will follow which will wrench East from West, and perhaps with the nine million Asiatics pitted aganst the mere four hundred and fifty million of Europeans, all their machine guns and submarines, poison gasses and aeroplanes, proud criteria of our superior civilzation notwithstanding, may annihilate the whole of our Western culture. For the entire East is awake. Japan is free; China is slowly but surely advancing; Turkey and Persia too. India can no more be held in bondage than the rising tide of the ocean can be stayed. She will no longer accept stones for bread.

Stones, you say? What ingratitude! For a century and a half of benign protection, for the thousands of miles of railroads and wondrous highways we have unselfishly built; for the sanitation, irrigation systems and medical aid we have lavishly bestowed. What crass ingratitude! Call it that if you will. India has not asked these gifts of the West. She points to her neighbors in Japan and assures us that in her own way she would have gained these benefits and at a far less exhorbitant cost in gold and suffering and human life, reducing her from the noblest and richest to the meanest and poorest nation on earth. No benefits can compensate for her loss of liberty. Ingratitude, well and good. They will no longer lick the hand that patronizingly protects them, nor the fist that strikes them, simply because its skin is white. A people has been reborn, and to resist its high and holy resolve, to be set free were to carry the whole human race perhaps to destruction. England must lose India forever, if she resist her now.

But England need not lose India if in true munificence and that humility becoming so great and mighty a nation, she accords without further tantalization and delay this numberless people the same place in her Empire's sun that is enjoyed by her other loyal Dominions. The white man's burden must be forever forgotten; to an ancient and cultured people must be restored their pristine pride; white and brown and black must mingle as brethren, and a wise and profound nation, whose inhabitants, Dr. V. H. Rutherford, a member of the British Parliament, maintained, "far surpass their English rivals in brilliancy, wit, logic, knowledge, breadth of vision and ideals of statesmanship," must be permitted again as before, the right to rule itself; Risks there may be: Moslem-Hindu feuds and greedy nations at her gates. But that is India's gamble and sole concern. Economic loss might be sustained, but any student of political economy knows that India has cost the masses of England likewise grinding taxation, meaningless wars, and has reduced them to factory slaves, while it has enriched only the privileged few. Prestige? Ah, but there is no other way! To resist spells death to the Empire. To be expedient, if magnanimity is beyond our Western code, is to endear India to Britain forever and to guarantee peace to the hearts of men. We cannot keep India back, warned Ramsay MacDonald in the "Awakening of India." Her destiny is fixed above our will; and we had better recognize it and bow to the Inevitable."

India today is a smouldering volcano. The Imperialistic West can awaken it to violent eruption or soothe it to calm. For India shall be free! God grant that we may choose the latter course; that England not lose her Indian Empire, but that side by side with us of Canada, our fellow subjects in Australia, New Zealand, Ireland and South Africa, India too may stand, a free, a prosperous, a peaceful and happy commonwealth of nations, within a redeemed and beneficent Empire, for

All nations have their message from on high.
Each the Messiah of some vital thought
For the fulfilment and delight of men.
One has to teach that labor is divine,
Another freedom, and another mind.
And all that God is universal, and all just.
Aye, each a message has from God's great heart.
And each is needed for the world's great life.

First Zionist Congress Reproduced

The First Zionist Congress held at Basle in 1897 was reproduced, by Judaeans and ex-Judaeans Friday night, March 13, in the Auditorium of the Y.M.H.A.

Theodor Herzl (Louis Fitch, K.C.) acted as chairman, and welcomed the delegates. He outlined the policies of Zionism, recounted the trials and tribulations of the Jews in the Diaspora, and urged all to unite with the sole purpose of mitigating against alleviating, and nullifying these conditions which were sapping the physical and moral strength and courage of World Jewry. He maintained that philanthropy would not build up Palestine. But the perseverance, the integrity, and the resourcefulness of a combined Jewry, expressed properly through the Zionist organization was the only way to succeed in the rehabilitation of the ancient land. When this speech was over Judaeans burst into the song of "Boker." Nahum Sokolow (S. E. Schwisberg) stressed the cultural aspect of Zionism and maintained that knowledge of Hebrew was important to the success of the Nationalist movement. Prof. Herman Shapiro (Bernard Figler) urged that the various problems of the Jew be viewed dispassionately and logically, and solved in the precise methods with which one would solve a mathematical problem. Max Nordau (A. M. Klein) asked for the co-operation of all Jews and said that now was the time for them to seek a proper solution of their difficulties. Leon Motzkin (Eli Berger) said that these things were essential for the success of Zionism: leadership, confidence, and enthusiasm, unity, financial and moral support.

M. M. Ussishkin (M. J. Garmaise) stressed the financial aspect of Zionism, and urged that intensive immigration and colonization were of prime importance. Achad Ha'am (Harry Batshaw) stressed the necessity for the revival of the Hebrew language. He maintained, too, that the Jews must come home to Judaism before they could come home to their country and occupy it in a fitting manner.

Bernard Lazare (S. H. Abrahamson) recounted several personal incidents between Herzl and himself, and contended that active political and cultural Zionism would do a great deal in alleviating conditions of oppressed Jews everywhere. Israel Zangwill (Ben Caplan) discussed the economic possibilities of Palestine. Jacob de Haas (Joe Frank) read a message in accord with the fundamental principles of Zionism.

Zionist President Expresses Faith in British

Reviewing the Zionist situation A. J. Freiman, President of the Canadian Zionist Organization, expressed his wholehearted confidence in the British Government, which he felt will remain true to its pledges. Mr. Freiman was the chief speaker at a preliminary rally of the 1931 United Palestine Appeal for $100,000 which will be held from April 19 to 30. The meeting was held at the Windsor Hotel Tuesday night under the auspices of the Zionist Order Habonim, who acted as hosts to the executive and the council of the Canadian Zionist Organization. H. L. Sourkes, Supreme Nassi of the order, presided.

Rabbi J. L. Zlotnik endorsed the appeal of Mr. Freiman to the rank and file of the workers to throw themselves wholeheartedly into the work that meant so much to the Jews the world over. "No greater appeal along these lines has been made than that of Prof. Einstein," he said, quoting as follows: "History has today allotted us the task of contributing actively to the economic and cultural reconstruction of Palestine. Inspired men of genius and vision have laid the foundations of our work, to which many of the best among us are prepared to devote their lives. It were well if each of us felt the full significance of the work and contributed each his utmost to its success."

The solidarity of the order was marked by pledges of faith and wholehearted support by the presidents of the constituent lodges. Speaking on behalf of the Geulah Lodge, Leon Crestohl pledged the active support of all its members in the coming drive as did A. Katz on behalf of the Maccabean Lodge; Bernard Figler, for the Sons of Israel Lodge; N. Galsin, the Knights of Judaea; D. Silverstone, the Balfour Lodge.

The slogan for the United Palestine Appeal is: "Palestine Expects Every Man to do His Duty." Louis Fitch, K.C., said: "There is a reawakening of Jewish feeling towards Zionism that has the elements of permanence."

MAN STRUCK BY CAR DIES IN HOSPITAL

Harry Shulemson, 65 years of age, of 4859 Clarke street, who was struck by an automobile at the corner of St. Lawrence boulevard and Rachel street Thursday morning, died at the Royal Victoria Hospital in the afternoon, March 12. His daughter, who had gone in search of her father when he failed to return home following his departure, during the morning for a walk, arrived at the hospital a few minutes after death ensued. Death was due to a fractured skull and severe internal injuries, it was reported. The body was taken to the morgue where an inquest was held Friday.

According to information received by the police of the St. Lawrence boulevard station, under Captain Laurin, the victim was crossing the street when two automobiles collided, one of the cars striking Shulemson. The man was picked up unconscious, and rushed to the hospital.

The accident occurred when the automobile, driven by A. Meunier, of 643 Stuart avenue, Outremont, going east on Rachel street, collided with one driven by Max Marks, of 4823 St. Urbain street, and going north on St. Lawrence boulevard. It was Meunier's automobile which struck Shulemson, the police reported.

Magnes Appeals For Hebrew University Fund

"If there were no university in Jerusalem, it would be important to create one, and it is almost a misfortune that one was not created two generations ago," Dr. Judah L. Magnes, chancellor of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem said Saturday night at a dinner at the Savoy-Plaza tendered him by the American Advisory Committee of the university.

"Jerusalem is a natural and logical place for a university with scientific aspirations," Dr. Magnes said in his address to 200 friends of the institution.

"It is important for science, because of the geographical situation of Jerusalem and of Palestine, and it is of essential importance for the proper understanding of the conditions under which Palestine is to develop.

"Add to all of this the historical interest of the place and I think I have already made out my case; and it seems to me that it should be a cause of satisfaction to Jews that it is they who have established this center of science and that it is due primarily to them that Jerusalem is performing its historic role in modern ways — that of bringing knowledge and teaching to men."

Commenting on the relations between the Arabs and the Jews, Chancellor Magnes said:

"The grave question of East and West is for us not academic alone. We face it actually and today in that tragic and creative land called Palestine.

"I am not here to engage in political discussion. I am here to raise funds for the university. But whatever be our political views, every one, I assume, will admit the perplexity and the menace of the present relationships between East and West, of which the Jewish-Arab problem is but a part."

Introducing Chancellor Elmer Ellsworth Brown, of New York University, who presided at the dinner, Felix M. Warburg, chairman of the American Advisory Committee, said: "It is our privilege and our duty to see to it that the ambitions of a Magnes, of an Einstein, of a Weizmann and of many others are carried out by our support." In introducing Dr. Magnes, Chancellor Brown paid tribute to "the mighty treasure of Jewish erudition which the Hebrew University has at its command."

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancor,
That for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an anchor."

A Toronto Christian minister was overwhelmed once when told that Jewish children are jeered at often by Christian children and called names because of their Jewishness. The minister is a good-hearted soul and his eyes filled with tears. He said that if he had known about it before he would have written something on the subject for his church bulletin. This is an actual fact and, hard as it is to believe, it gives an insight into the distance which ministers are able to maintain between themselves and the actualities of life. However, in the last very few years there have been signs that where there is life there is hope for betterment even in the bodies of organized religion. These signs lie in part in some realization by churches and synagogues that they may not be able to influence human life by instruction and thought unless they recognize human needs and teach in terms of life.

One result of awakening on the part of the church will be shown May 28 when a special commission will recommend physical examination before marriage at the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. This commission on marriage, divorce and remarriage was created to compile a new chapter on marriage for the church constitution, that is to enable ministers to declare where they stand in these changing times. The present objective of the church to provide generally pre-marriage examinations obligatory by law is of significance. But the General Assembly can not claim to be progressive with this point alone considering that the special commission approves only two grounds for divorce; unfaithfulness and irremediable desertion. It holds that remarriage can be considered orthodox only when practiced by innocent individuals made single from action of one of the approved grounds for divorce.

The commission shows progress in declaring its intention of enlightening children about sex and young people about married life, following in this the plan of the Lambeth Conference of Anglican Bishops. But the marriage definition was continued as previously listed, including "an unbroken continuance of wedlock so long as both shall live." Thus, while in and out of the church there are people who believe that they have only one life and who long for that life to experience every chance for happiness, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church is going to plod along toward the solution of the divorce question not from life itself but from tradition. The result will be a weakened influence brought about through the inability of impractical clergymen to understand the realities of daily life or through their mulish determination to bend to the rules a modern world which is dead set against the fraditional view.

The Jews are famous among the Gentiles for the large proportion of happy marriages among them. They have fewer divorces and fewer separations and yet their view of marriage is so much less rigid. The Christian view is so harsh that it is a wonder young people do not regard the marriage bond as a potential prison house and flee in the other direction. "An unbroken continuance of wedlock so long as both shall live" is enough to frighten any pair considering what life reveals daily in habitual drunkenness, incurable malady, hereditary disease, corrupt morals, incompatibility of temperament, and any circumstances which lead to suffering, defeat, or deterioration.

The Jewish view of marriage is that it is holy not by divine law or benefit of clergy but because of its relation to human personailty. A marriage is a good marriage worth continuing as long as both parties shall live only when it brightens the lives of both and makes them finer people through the richness of their life together. A marriage is a good marriage from the Jewish point of view when both parties can truthfully answer "yes" to the question: "Are you happily married?" If these parties must answer that they can not tolerate their marriage, that it is spiritually crushing and hateful they may separate. If they stay together and live a cat and dog life or one without joy it is because they don't mind; not because they must. The Jewish attitude toward divorce and marriage takes into account practical facts, passions and prejudices, human needs and foibles and is therefore superior in principle to the attitudes of other religions with regard to this vital question.

Historical Sketches

(Suggestions for these sketches will be received gratefully; also any additions or corrections.)

The name of the first Jew who made the village of Hamilton his habitation is not known. Among the early pioneers have been noted those bearing the names of Joseph Moses and Abraham Israel, and that was as far back as 1788, the period when United Empire Loyalists predominated among the setlers in this locality. Old directories give the names of Jewish residents as far back as 1850, but there is reason to believe there were at least a few here 20 years previous to that. In the Hamilton directory for 1851-52 were given the names of three Jews, J. Samuel, David Rose and G. J. Lazarus, and this, of course, was previous to the incorporation of Hamilton as a city. In the directory of 1856 the number had increased to thirteen. It is known that by 1856 services were being held in a room located between James and Macnab streets, the first president of the little group being M. Behmer and treasurer J. Sherman, while Mr. Roos was vice-president, and at 8 a.m., 4.30 p.m. and 6.30 p.m. on Saturdays, the faithful met for worship there.

In the following year a plot of ground was bought for a cemetery. The deed to the ground, which consisted of a half-acre "situated in the township of Barton," bears the date of June 18, 1857, and the sale was made to Samuel Boehn, Isaac Shire, Samuel Desbacker, Henry Zinsheimer, Samuel Prince Daniel Shire, and Abraham Mayer, in trust for the use of the Hamilton Hebrew Bethel society. The price paid was thirty pounds, and on August 23, 1864, Michael Burkholder, the owner of the property, sold an additional quarter of an acre adjoining the first piece to David and Jacob Hammel, Louis Gross and Louis Sachs, trustees of the Kesher Shell Barsell Benevolent society. In this conveyance the name of the "Anshe Sholom society" is mentioned as the owner of the first half acre, while the price paid for the additional quarter acre was $60. These lands are still used as the burial ground of the congregation.

The inscription on the earliest tombstones, almost obliterated by age, are in Hebrew only, and bear the dates of 5619 (1859) and 5620 (1860). The first stone with the inscription in the English language marks the grave of Olga Rosenband, daughter of L. Rosenband, died on May 14, 1862, the next those of Mrs. Caroline Manuel Levy, died December 27, 1862, and Mrs. Sigismond Drey, died November 12, 1863. Rosenband and Drey had established a wholesale fancy goods business in the early fifties, and were pioneers in Canada in that branch of trade.

The "Anshe Sholom" was at its inception a fraternal benefit association, its name meaning the men of peace, and was called into life by the brothers David and Jacob Hammel, Simon Shire and his four sons, Isaac, Daniel, Salomon and Adolph. They all came from Gemunden (Rhenish Prussia), in the early fifties. The congregation, one of the pioneer Jewish religious bodies of Canada, was incorporated by act of the parliament of Canada on May 5, 1863, under the name of the Anshe Sholom congregation. The charter granted the power to hold property not exceeding five thousand pounds ($25,000) for the purpose of building a synagogue and laying out a cemetery. The names of those who were, according to the charter: Jacob Frey, Isaac Levy, Henry Zinsheimer, Samuel Desbecker, Leopold Rosenband, Daniel and Simon Shire, Leopold Loeb, Isaac Shire, William Loeb, Mendel Levy, Abraham Levy, Iberman Levy, Jonas Draenger, Solomon Ungar, Herman Wolf, Bernhard Weinberg, Abraham Saimon and Louis Daniels. All the charter members were of German origin, and the few books available of this early period were kept in that language. The membership dues were $4.50 per annum and the bylaws provided for the payment of benefits to members in case of sickness or need, but only in two cases were these advantages claimed.

Hamilton was a small place at that time, and in less than five years after the charter was issued most of the original founders of the congregation had left the city. Isaac Levy and Jonas Draenger moved to London, Ont., and were likely the first Jews settling in that locality. David and Jacob Hammel became prominent citizens of Appleton, Wisconsin. Samuel Desbecker and Daniel Shire moved to Buffalo, where their descendents rank at the present time among the foremost Jewish families of that city. Isaac Shire located in Milwaukee, while Simon Shire died in Chicago at the great age of 94 years at the home of his son Adolph, who too passed away in November, 1925.

(From Hamilton Herald. To be concluded next week.)

Toronto Newspaper Urges Square Deal For The Jew

The following letter which appeared in the Toronto Daily Star called forth an article, "Let Us Be Fair", in The Observer column: My son has celebrated his sixth birthday last week and as one of his birthday gifts his mother promised him a course of swimming lessons. He is a manly youngster, big for his age, and this gift appealed to him beyond all the others, and he became quite excited over it. On Saturday morning his mother took him to Willard Hall where swimming lessons are conducted for such youngsters, and the boy enthusiastically walked up to the lady in charge, explained to her about his gift and had quite a chat with her. She was delighted with him and arranged to accept him into the class. And his mother tendered the money.

The authorities, before admitting children, insist on medical certificates as to their health, and my boy had that all arranged and gave the lady his doctor's certificate. When the lady noticed on the certificate for the first time the name Rosenberg, her kindly smile disappeared, and in a stern voice said to the youngster: "Are you Jewish?" The youngster naturally answered "Yes." He was then told that the lady was sorry, but that there had been recent regulations enacted which prevented Jewish children from entering the swimming classes.

My boy was born in Toronto, attends public school in Toronto. His environment, education and aspirations are purely Canadian, and of quite a high level for a boy of that age. He is a very thoughtful youngster and his disappointment is very great. He had been looking forward to the swimming lessons so much. In the evening when I came home, he said to me: "Daddy, are Jews not allowed to swim. Why would not that lady let me in to the swimming class?"

My dear Editor, can you suggest to me an answer that I might give to this boy so that he might grow up a law abiding Canadian citizen, feeling that Canada is a country of equal opportunities to all and a country where race prejudice does not exist?

Henry S. Rosenberg.

The answering article follows:

The Christian Church exults in her glorious roll of martyrs and gives thanks for them to God. She ought then never to forget that Christians have not in all their history suffered at the hands of heathen a tithe of what the Jew has suffered at the hands of Christians. Apart from the peculiarly frightful Armenian massacres, the Boxer attempt to stamp out Christianity in China, and a similar attempt three hundred years ago in Japan, the last two due much less to religious intolerance than to the resentment and fear excited by European aggressiveness, Christians, I think, have never experienced heathen persecution on an extensive scale except during the two centuries and a half from the first persecution under Nero to the last under Diocletian, and this persecution was very intermittent and mostly conducted according to the principles of Roman justice.

But the conversion of Constantine in 313, which closed the blood-stained volume of Christian suffering at the hands of heathen, opened a far more appalling volume, that of Jewish suffering at the hands of Christians. The Christian treatment of the Jew has been the most fiendish cruelty of human history. From the eleventh to the fourteenth century the history of the Jews in France is a series of successive massacres. In 1321 there were whole provinces in which every Jew was burned; at Chinon one hundred and sixty of both sexes were burned together. Finally, in 1395, all Jews were banished.

In England the people were subject to the same wild frenzies, though they were not so frequent. In Spain the Jews enjoyed peace and prosperity under the mild rule of the Moors, but the Christian reconquest of the peninsula was followed by the horrors of the Spanish Inquisition, and finally by the deportation, with the loss of all their property, of all Jews who would not accept baptism. Not less than 200,000 of the most industrious, the most thriving, the most peaceable and the most learned of the population of Spain went into exile and beggary rather than be guilty of apostasy. In Italy, while they suffered from occasional outbreaks of popular ferocity, the Jews enjoyed for the most part the protection of the popes.

Gradually a more enlightened and Christian attitude has established itself in western Europe and America, but the old medieval ferocity has prevailed until quite recently, or even till the present, in Russia, Poland and Roumania. Even until the present century, in these countries if a Christian youth disappeared or was found dead under mysterious circumstances, the charge might be made that he had been murdered by the Jews, who wanted human blood for ritual purposes.

It is not in human nature to be exposed to such savagery for a millennium and a half, to be driven from land to land, to be crowded into squalid and insanitary ghettos, to be prevented by insecurity from engaging in any occupation that was incompatible with sudden flight, without physical and moral injury. What are popularly supposed, often with great injustice, to be the characteristic faults of Jews are, so far as they are not faults common to the race, all due to the unnatural conditions under which the Christian has compelled the Jew to live. That the Jew has emerged from this unparalleled oppression unconquered, with an intelligence that places him everywhere in the front rank, and a vitality which gives him an average longevity beyond that of the Christian, is the miracle of history. It is one of the supreme spiritual achievements of the human race.

It is inconceivable that God would have permitted such a prolonged tragedy as that of Israel if in His providence He was not to make it minister to the spiritual enrichment of mankind. Christendom owes to the Jews Jesus Christ, His apostles, and what is most vital in the Christian Church, but we may feel sure that there will be still further contributions from a people so indestructible, so unconquerable, and with such a genius for religion.

Yet even to the virgin soil of this new land old bigotries and prejudices have been transplanted. Civil rights have been accorded to the people to whom we freely admit we owe the most precious elements of our civilization, but social equality is still withheld. Not long since the charge was publicly made in this city that our hospitals were indisposed to admit Jewish men and women as doctors or nurses. Recently a well-known Jewish lawyer has affirmed that there are insurance companies which refuse to issue policies to Jews. There are reports of summer hotels which are barred to Jewish guests. All who love little children must have been moved at the story told with such temperate language in The Star last Saturday of a bright lad of six refused admission to an institution where swimming lessons are given to children because his parents were Jewish.

There are more than 45,000 Jews in Toronto, more than 60,000 in Montreal, 2,000,000 in New York, 4,000,000 on this continent. They are increasing and scattering. Why should we penalize all Jews for the less agreeable traits of some of them? Sooner or later these ancient and evil barriers will fall. Why not sooner rather than later? They wound the spirit and make national unity impossible.

Why not follow the counsel of Pope Gregory IX, who in 1233 issued a bull commanding the archbishops and bishops of France to protect the Jews from oppression and in his closing words directed that "the same kindness should be shown Jews by Christians as we wish should be shown to Christians living among the heathen"?

The finest Jews, it is admitted, are found in the countries where they are treated most fairly. There is a famous saying, "Every country has the kind of Jew it deserves." A famous peer, Lord Rosebery, counted, I suppose, one of the most eligible bachelors in Britain, married a Jewess and counted that marriage one of the three great honors of his career. If Canada desires Jewish citizens who will serve her as Disraeli and Lord Reading and Sir Herbert Samuel, the late Lord Melchett and hosts of other Jews have served or are serving Britain, let us treat our Jews as Britain has treated hers.

There are problems in the free social intercourse of people of differing religions, faith and customs, but not more so for Protestants in regard to Jews than in regard to Catholics, yet there is no ban against Catholics as there would seem to be against Jews.

Friendships and intimacies must be governed for the most part by congeniality, but no Jew should be shut out of any advantages which would naturally be his if he were not a Jew. Strangers are kind enough sometimes to tell us that they find Toronto a courteous and friendly city. Let us be adventurous enough and Christian enough to try to make this city the friendliest and fairest of all cities and Canada the friendliest and fairest of all lands.

Does it not seem preposterous to treat the Jew as inferior in the very hour in which all the world is doing homage to a Jew as its greatest example of pure intellectual power?

"It's just as I said," Jessica reminded the company. "There's nothing else to be done. You can't kick about that, Morton."

"Certainly not. But it does make me furious—to be kept in the dark this way." Morton's voice had an edged incisiveness. "All business is done hindside foremost. First we're told about the inventory. Then we hear that we've got to pick out what we want; and last of all, after we've asked dozens of questions, we find that the place is going to be sold. Wouldn't it be simpler—now wouldn't it—to start at the beginning instead of the end?" He appealed to them as a corporate body.

Nobody answered. Morton had scored. "Of course it would be better," he announced after a moment. In answering his own question, he had made himself the spokesman of the whole party, had interpreted the silence in terms of a reluctant assent.

"See here, Morton." George tried sternness. "If you disapprove of my way of doing business—" He hesitated and his gaze wandered haplessly around the room. Foundered in the middle of his speech, he waited for a word from Ann or Jessica that would give him a general idea of the sort of concluding clause he needed. To hide his anxiety, he rubbed out the sample asterisk with painstaking thoroughness.

Morton had broken in briskly on his suspense. "I do disapprove. Now—what are you going to do about it?"

"We'll see—we'll just see." George took refuge in a mysterious threat.

"In fact, I've been disapproving all along." Morton tapped back a yawn. "Apparently that'll get us nowhere. Let's be pleasant with one another for a change—and see how that works."

"I want to be pleasant, you know—honestly I do." George, blinking under the sudden beam of Morton's goodwill, put out a timid groping feeler. "I'll be decent if you will, old man."

Morton was a bit nonplused. George had evidently failed to detect the acidulous tang that his particular brand of sweetness always contained.

"Is it a go?" George pressed.

Morton felt himself being drawn into a sentimental scene. He hated the idea of it—particularly with Clarke, there in the offing, as a witness; but, just for a moment, he saw no way out.

"Come ahead, Morton," George was begging. "There's no sense in finding fault. We've got to do our level best, every one of us. We've got to stay friends."

All at once, to his boundless relief, Morton heard himself sneeze.

"There!" He jumped to his feet. "I knew it—that means a cold." He glared about him in triumph.

"Don't be a fool, Morton," Jessica warned. "Sit down and try to behave like a man."

"No—I must be going." He spoke with a barbed politeness. "There's no real need of my being here to-day, anyhow. I know the house by heart." He turned a bright smile on George. "If you'll send that inventory around to the hotel, I'll check up the things I want. Just roughly, you know — you can substitute the asterisks when you have time. Good-by." He waved a cordial hand at the company, singled Clarke out for a gay bow and left the room with the dashing nonchalance a matinée idol. After the door had closed behind him, the others remained silent for a moment, like actors, who, after the exit of the star, must let the applause out front subside before they can go on with their parts.

"What he needs is a good spanking," Jessica decided at last.

George was digging his pencil into the morocco cover of the inventory. Suddenly the pointed snapped off short. "O Lord!" he complained in a fatigued bitterness. "What is the use?"

"Let's get started." Jessica threw her cloak over her and began to collect the jeweled trinkets—cigarette-case, match-case, vanity-box—that she had scattered over the table. "How about it George? Take the downstairs rooms first?"

"Yes—downstairs first," he agreed disconsolately. "By the way," this to Clarke, "do you happen to have a pencil with you?"

Among Toronto Jewish Women

Mrs. Henry C. Davis, 82 Kendal Avenue, says: "Among the many capable women in the Jewish community of Toronto, Mrs. Harry Samuel, of 68 Hillhome Road, and Mrs. Charles Draimin, of 80 Howland Avenue, stand out as being women, who in addition to the fulfilling their many personal duties, feel keenly their responsibility to the community. Mrs. Samuel in her work for the Council of Jewish Women has given of herself unsparingly, and is now its worthy president. In no less a degree has Mrs. Draimin worked for the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies. Both women are the finest examples of generosity, kindness, and unselfishness."

ECZEMA

Eczema is an inflammation of the skin accompanied by itching and burning. There are many forms of inflammation of the skin, the most common of which is eczema or saltrheum. It occurs frequently among babies and old people.

As in any other inflammation, there is redness of the part. The redness increases if the part is irritated. The part itches and sometimes the itching is almost unbearable.

Eczema may be limited to one area, such as the face, or the hands, or the scalp, or it may spread to several parts of the body.

An inflammation of the skin may follow some irritation from outside. If the hair-brush strikes the ear repeatedly, it may set up an inflammation of the skin of the ear.

The inflammation of the skin which are difficult to deal with are those which are due to some internal condition. The difficulty in treating them lies in the fact that it is not easy to find the cause, and it is not possible to treat any condition properly until the cause is known. Proper treatment always aims at the removal of the cause, otherwise the condition is not cured and will likely recur.

Improper diet or inability to digest food properly may cause eczema. In such cases, it is the diet which must be corrected, or the digestive system cared for. In babies, if there is too much fat in the diet or if the baby is constipated, eczema may appear as a symptom.

The skin of some persons is particularly sensitive to certain factors which, in their cases, act as irritants and set up an inflammation of the skin.

Some people can use only the mildest of soaps; others cannot wear flannel next to the skin without having trouble.

Workers in certain industries, whose hands and wrists are exposed to metals, may have skin trouble.

Eczema is also associated with what is called a generally run-down condition. The person whose health has suffered because of worry, lack of sleep or fresh air, or from any other condition which lowers his general health, may develop eczema as a result.

Eczema in old age is often associated with this general loss of physical fitness which is really old age.

The itching which occurs may be relieved by soothing ointments, but cure can only be brought about by removal of the cause. The physician's services are required in order to find the cause and direct the treatment towards the removal of the responsible factor.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

BRIDGE CLUB DANCE

The University of Toronto Jewish Women's Bridge Club held a supper and dance Tuesday, March 17th, attended by Misses Reva Baker, Ethel Zacks, Gertrude Cohen, Hannah Stern, Hilda Tepperman, Yona Ellias, Belle Zahler, Frances Weisberg; and Shi Fine, George Roth, Walter Glass, of Hamilton, Sam Maldover, Ralph Webber, Murray Cohen, Art Golden, and Sam Kertzer.

LOSES TEETH IN SOCIAL CONFLICT

"What constitutes a social conflict," and "Is a social conflict sufficient explanation for the loss of two teeth?" — these questions were hotly handled by counsel Tuesday morning in a case arising out of the recent strike of the Jewish Bakers' Union in Montreal.

Six men were arraigned before Judge Monet, charged with assaulting Hyman Richmond, of the St. Lawrence boulevard bakery store. The accused are: Hyman Wasserman, David Genel, Abraham Rosenfeld, Max Steinberg, S. Siegel and F. Katz. It is claimed that all are members of the Jewish Bakers' Union.

Counsel for the plaintiff said that the men attacked his client on March 7, while he was walking along St. Lawrence Boulevard. He claimed that Richmond was severely beaten.

Counsel for the defense here interposed that "the disturbance was the usual upshot of a dispute between employer and employe, and was to all extent and appearances merely a social conflict."

JOLLITY GIRLS

The Jollity Girls held a kids' pyjama party, Saturday evening, March 14th, at the home of Miss Belle Jaffe, Beatrice Street. Prizes for games were won by Misses Rose Arnoff, Flo Zidenberg, Hilda Sherrik, Mollie Adler, Lil Tobis, Rose Hershorn, and Rose Van Der Hout. Miss Esther Weinroth was Master of Ceremonies. THE ENEMY'S GATES

During the entire year that followed Morgenthal's death, George labored with a grinding persistence. He moved in a chaos, felt his way through a world that was insecure to his footing, unfamiliar to his eyes—as the harsh crust of some burnt-out planet. The jargon of finance sounded like gibberish upon his ears. Till late at night, he would study that incredible tongue and seek to translate it into his own speech. His new home (a seven-room apartment in East Sixty-fifth Street that Ann had fitted up to resemble a snug cottage in the country) was a real comfort to him; but the hours of work and worry he spent there had soon robbed it of something of its first tranquil charm.

His father's will had named him an executor. A seat on the Stock Exchange was his; every day, in a mood of mingled terror and defiance, he ventured upon the floor. Keeping back, all his life, from the suction of humanity, he had suddenly been drawn into the central whirlpool. His first morning in that urbane bustle had given him an actual physical care. He had gone numb all over at the shouts of "Tennessee, Tennessee!" that greeted his entrance. Trying to smile in casual friendliness at the men who jostled him and thumped him with paper bludgeons, he had longed to duck under the arm of the nearest tormentor, to make a dash for home and Ann. Glee was running high on the Exchange that morning. The first of a series of international polo matches was to be played in the afternoon at Meadowbrook. A half-holiday had been granted by the Governors. At twelve o'clock a whooping burlesque of the conflict was staged on the floor. George had looked on, miserable and a bit scornful. His emotions had been those of a new boy in a big school. Little almost to the vanishing point he felt, and unsteady on his legs; an ache of loneliness throbbed at the pit of his stomach: still, he had a slight frown of superiority for this exhibition of unashamed nonsense. It had jarred on his reticence.

When he returned that day to Ann, however, he had answered her anxious questions with an elaborate simulation of composure. "Rather jolly—I'm going to like it. A splendid lot of men, you know. Just at first I was in a daze." He attempted a reminiscent chuckle that failed to carry conviction. "But I was quite at home in no time — no time at all." He smiled at her; she turned away, stooped down and blindly patted her dog. It had struck her that she would be taking a dishonorable advantage if she looked longer at George's face, with its damp fog-pallor, with its eyes widened by an almost delirious fear.

"I'm so glad the first day's over successfully." She had taken Sandy up into her arms. Her breath tickled his ear and he twitched it nervously.

"Yes — it is a relief in a way," George confessed. "But Bernstein had prepared me—I knew what to expect, of course."

"I like Alberta Bernstein—I do like that man," Ann remarked.

"A nice chap," George agreed. His approval was keyed to a quieter, more temperate note than Ann's. "Once in a while he's a bit of a boss."

"But he's so kind—oh, I do like that man." Ann repeated her words slowly, as if they were a motto she was striving to teach her husband.

"So do I." But again George's assent held a very slight reservation. He gave a shuddering yawn. "I'm done up." He never allowed Ann to dwell for more than a moment on Bernstein's virtues. "I think I'll lie down for an hour, dear."

Before Morgenthal died, he had taken Bernstein into his confidence and shrewdly prepared him for the task of handling George. "The boy is absolutely lacking in self-confidence; but for heaven's sake don't show him that you can see it," Mark had cautioned. "I really think you'll be able to do more for him than I could. He's always distrusted me." Of a sudden, his voice lost its vaguely ironic detachment; a stern fervor had rung through his next words. "I leave him to you, Bernstein. It's the hardest thing in the world to be his friend. He'll try to make you his enemy—don't let him. Don't give him up."

That Bernstein had been in Morgenthal's confidence, George instinctively realised from the start; and at once, something of his old spleen had begun to stir again, like a sluggish poison, in his brain. Drop by vitriolic drop, it was mingled with his thoughts on his father's associate.

Bernstein's power to vex had another and less subtle aspect: he had come to stand for all that puzzled and humiliated George in the new life. Patient, lucid, unfalteringly reasonable, he had in the beginning discussed all details of the business with George, casually dropping advice and valuable hints as he went along. George had been quick to detect the cautious scheme. Bernstein was playing down to him, trying to coax him, as if he'd been a bad-tempered child, into learning what was good for him. Bitterly he disapproved of that method of instruction; but when Bernstein gave up the attempt to explain everything to him, he grew even more resentful. Little by little, he had come to hold the man responsible, in some mysterious way, for his own fumbling ignorance. "He relies too much on his own judgment," he had complained to Ann. 'And I'm handicapped — because he won't talk matters over with me." In his heart, George had a tragic suspicion of the truth; Bernstein had noticed his consternation, whenever some intricate problem in finance was broached; Bernstein had seen him come into the office, morning after morning, haggard from a night of desperate toil, with black patches of bristles on his grim jaw—a telltale sign that his hand had been shaking when he shaved. It had been for the sake of his young charge's health and happiness that the kindly man had changed his tactics, had put into George's way only the simple details that could be quickly grasped and, by an exercise of ingenuity, given the look of weight. The matter of inventory had been typical. Until Morton had mercilessly reduced it to the miniature scale, George had regarded it as of engrossing interest. He was an indefatigable worker, willing to exhaust himself on any project that he could understand. At such times, he would be in a hot fume of impatience—but happy, too, after his fashion. Then, in a moment, his mood would blacken. Bernstein was deliberately keeping him busy on futile chores, was holding back the more complex affairs of the estate. It was obvious that he discounted the ability of the head of the house, considered it a waste of his time to explain the subtle and significant points. 'Damn it," George would bluster, "he'll find he can't always have his own way."

It was impossible, even for him, to consider Bernstein tricky and unreliable; that he was mulishly opinionated, however, began to appear self-evident to his young critic.

"He's a very honest man—too honest, almost. He doesn't know the rudiments of tact or diplomacy," George had once commented to Ann.

"Oh, I think you're wrong about that," Ann had protested.

"I know what I'm talking about," he had answered in gentle rebuke. "Remember—that's in strict confidence. Don' let it go any further."

George Bernstein and Jules Grünewald, a cousin of Morgenthal's, were the three executors of the estate. George, though he fretted away more hours of labor than either of the others, remained an honorable figurehead. Grünewald, a rich man and a brilliant one, but a passionate lover of indolence, had soon found Bernstein to be a genius and a shrewd tactician, with the additional merit of absolute integrity. That was enough, certainly. Grünewald could leave everything to Bernstein and sink back into his intelligent lassitude, drawing life into his lungs with the drugged equanimity of a hookah-smoker cross-legged on his cushions. So Bernstein, ready and resourceful, controlled the fortunes of the Morgenthals. A devout admirer of Mark, he had been stricken by a genuine grief at his death and by a deep concern at the confusion of his affairs. Morgenthal had recognized his ability when he was a clerk struggling to support a mother and four querulous older sisters—and, on the side, furtively fighting consumption. One bleak January day fifteen years ago, Mark had taken Bernstein by the arm, drawn him into his private office and given him a sage ten-minute talk. Eighteen months later, the young man had returned from Colorado Springs with sound lungs. When he was thirty, the Morgenthal firm had purchased for him a seat on the Stock Exchange, with an option on his services for five years after the expiration of his present contract. Much of the routine of the business had been given over to him. That had left Mark more than ever at liberty to follow the gleam and flash of great mining schemes on distant continents. The branch office at the Waldorf had become the gathering place of Mark and the band of brilliant adventurers that comprised his new intimates.

At his death, most of his wealth was in the Armadillo Silver Mine in South America. Mark, though a gambler, had never permitted himself to be coaxed into a game of pure chance. The Armadillo Mine held a rich appeal for the imagination, to be sure. The artist in Morgenthal had responded to its enchantment. Spending a week on the property, he had been overwhelmed, each morning, by the sheer massive bulk of it—a mountain of silver it really was, encircled by a gigantic pile of disorderly peaks. To Morgenthal, it seemed that the whole great range had been thrown up at such reckless haste that a single tremor of the earth might be enough to send it tottering and tumbling forward in one thunderous landslide upon the deep amphi-theater it guarded; but till that cataclysm occurred, the mine would remain sturdy and immensely profitable in the center of its wide plateau. The base of the Armadillo Mountain was six thousand feet above sea-level; and yet, so lofty were the surrounding heights, it gave the effect of lying at the bottom of a crater, somewhere near the secret core of the world. Everything here was built on a titanic scale. The Armadillo property appeared less a mine than a quarry, out of which silver ingots could hewn in huge monolithic blocks.

At night, however, the region had lost its rugged solidity. Under the moonlight, the barrenness of the world melted to warm shadows and the whole air was filled with a watery sheen. Then one could almost believe it possible to scoop up the precious liquid silver into the palms and watch it trickle through the fingers.

Morgenthal, during his sojourn in South America, had not given himself up altogether to poetic flights. He had come away with the irrefutable proof that "Armadillo" had a tremendous tangible value, that its crude beauty could be converted into millions of American dollars. He had returned to New York with that inspiriting knowledge; he had brought back, also, the uneasy remembrance of a fainting spell he had suffered on the last morning of his visit. He had shrugged that worry aside, refused to face it till he had got the fascinating Armadillo project well under way. Nothing alarming, he had insisted to himself in the months when the silver mine demanded his exclusive attention. His body and brain were too busy to spare an hour in the consulting room of a doctor.

PUTNAM'S

COMMENTARIES

By Rabbi HARRY J. STERN, of Montreal,
Associate Contributing Editor

Our good friend Rabbi Julius Berger of Shaare Zion Synagogue, has to his credit a new book entitled "The Weekly Sermon." This volume, published by Bloch, contains homiletical discourses for every Sabbath and Festival of the Jewish Calendar. Jewish preachers everywhere will welcome sincerely this collection of sermons which are philosophical, timely and so truly Jewish. The last point is an important one. For far too many discourses pronounced in synagogues these days are void of the Jewish appeal and Jewish background. And what we admire most about Rabbi Berger's addresses, is the fact that they at all times present a religious or Jewish problem, which in turn is answered in a simple direct manner. Especially for the English Jewish preacher who is not at home in the original sources of the Midrash, Rabbi Berger's book will be most helpful. Hardly a discourse in the collection without a classical quotation or story from the treasure-house of the Haggadah. And the Midrashic art of preaching comes to the author by inheritance. He is a ben Ha-Rav—the son of a revered and scholarly Rabbi of the older school who, happily, is still active in teaching Torah in our own city. We are most happy to place in our library "The Weekly Sermon"—the only collection of its kind as yet in the English language. The book is in every way a valuable addition to Jewish homiletical literature in the vernacular.

CAN IT BE TRUE?

Rumor has it that legislation is about to be introduced in Quebec in order to make The Jewish Commission — a commission in name only. That is to say — the commission's powers to "supervise" the education of Jewish children as defined in the latest Jewish School Bill existing on the Statute books will be revoked and repealed. We can hardly believe this to be true! Such a bill, if passed, would mean a betrayal of Jewish rights guaranteed by a democratic liberal government.

MORBUS SABATICUS

The Christian Register in its column "Pleasantries" contains the following pointed paragraph which is also applicable to Jews:

"'Morbus Sabaticus,' or Sunday sickness, is a disease peculiar to church-goers. The attacks come on suddenly every Sunday. No symptoms are felt. On Saturday night the patient sleeps well, eats a hearty breakfast; but about church time the attack comes on, and continues till the services are over for the morning. The peculiar features of the disease are: 1—It always attacks professing church people. 2—It never makes its appearance except on Sundays. 3—The symptoms vary, but it never interferes with the sleep and appetite. 4—It never lasts more than twenty-four hours. 5—No physician is ever called in. 6—It is becoming painfully prevalent, and is alarmingly infectious. 7—No remedy is known for it except prayer. 8—Unless checked, it always proves fatal in the end—to the soul."

"AN UNDREAMED OF SOLIDARITY"

The creative work of the Jewish people in Palestine must go forward despite unfavorable political developments or temporary economic depressions. Every Jew therefore who possesses an imagination great enough to vision and appreciate the grandeur of the idea—"A Jewish Palestine"—will support generously the approaching United Palestine Appeal.

At this juncture of world events especially "an undreamed of solidarity" has taken hold of Israel. Jews of all shades of opinion are eagerly sharing in this great task of rebuilding Eretz Yisroel.

May Montreal Jewry prove to be part of that "undreamed of solidarity."

Rabbi Maurice Eisendrath,
Canadian Jewish Review,

I received the other day a copy of the Canadian Jewish Review. I read with much pleasure your excellent article on the Philadelphia Convention and wish to tell you also how pleased I was with your article on Zionism that appeared in the American Israelite. I intended to write you at the time but in the stress of many duties the matter escaped me. Though somewhat belated my expression of satisfaction is none the less hearty.

With cordial regards, I am, sincerely yours,
David Philipson.

To Change Location of Jewish Sanitarium

The executive committee will change the location of the proposed Jewish Consumptive Aid Tuberculosis sanitarium, which had been planned for Ahuntsic ward at Cartierville to a site outside the Island of Montreal. This change was announced to a protesting delegation of several hundred residents of the ward, representative of every interest in the whole ward, which waited upon the executive committee.

Included in the delegation were French and English citizens, pastors of all denominations, Dr. Langlois representing the Provost Institute, the Protestant School Board represented by O. S. Tyndale, K.C., Dr. Vidal for the Sacred Heart Hospital, and W. C. Pitfield, and other residents of Cartierville. The Societe des Artisans also lodged a formal protest.

The chief reason for the protest was stated to be the danger to the health of the citizens, especially to that of many school children in that immediate vicinity. In replying to the delegation, Alderman Bray admitted that the Executive had made a mistake in choosing the site of the hospital, but stated that it would be rectified at once by exchanging the land promised in Ahuntsic for a site outside the Island.
